Wag & Whisker Store Handbook

Wag & Whisker is a fictional store created for an AI engineering project. All products, people and policies are invented.

This handbook is the single reference for how Wag & Whisker works: who we are, how we keep toys safe, every product we sell, and the policies that apply to orders, shipping, returns, warranty claims, recalls and our loyalty programme. If a question isn't answered here, please contact us using the details in Section 10.

1. About Wag & Whisker

Wag & Whisker was founded in 2019 in Portland, Oregon by Maya Torres. The idea started with her rescue dog, Biscuit, a cheerful mixed breed with a talent for destroying cheap toys in minutes. After a year of sweeping stuffing off the floor and fishing plastic squeakers out of Biscuit's mouth, Maya decided to make toys she could trust: toys made from honest materials, sized properly, and built to last as long as the animal playing with them.

What began as a handful of rope toys sold at weekend markets is now an online store with a catalogue for dogs, cats and small pets. Every order is packed and shipped from our warehouse in Portland. We don't use third-party sellers or overseas fulfilment centres, which means we can check every parcel before it leaves.

Our values are simple, and they guide every product decision:

- Durable. A toy that falls apart is not only a waste of money, it can be dangerous. We design for the way animals actually play, not the way we wish they did.
- Non-toxic. Pets chew, lick and carry their toys. We only use materials we would be comfortable seeing in a child's mouth.
- Honest sizing. We give clear size and weight guidance for every toy, and we would rather tell you a toy isn't right for your pet than sell you the wrong one.

The team is small: Maya leads product design, a warehouse crew of six packs every order, and our customer care team answers questions by email and phone. We read every review and every message, and many of the toys in this handbook were changed because a customer told us how their pet really used them.

How a toy gets made

Every new toy starts with a problem a real pet has. Maya sketches a design, the team builds a handful of prototypes by hand, and the prototypes go home with staff and volunteer families for a month of real play. We watch how dogs grip a toy, where cats lose interest, and which parts small pets chew first. Only designs that survive that month go on to independent safety testing (see Section 2), and only designs that pass testing reach the catalogue. Most ideas never make it that far, and we're comfortable with that.

Packaging and sustainability

Our toys ship in plain recycled cardboard boxes sealed with paper tape. We don't use plastic air pillows or polystyrene; instead, we cushion parcels with shredded cardboard from our own warehouse offcuts. Product tags are printed on recycled card and attached with cotton string. Wherever possible, we buy materials from suppliers in North America to keep transport distances short.

Who we design for

We design for three groups of animals: dogs of every size and chewing style, cats from kittenhood onwards, and small pets such as rabbits, guinea pigs, hamsters and gerbils. We don't currently make toys for birds, reptiles or fish, because we don't yet have the expertise to design for them safely.

2. Safety Standards

Safety is the reason Wag & Whisker exists, so we hold every product to the same rules before it reaches our catalogue.

Materials policy

We build our toys from a short list of materials: natural rubber, food-grade silicone, organic cotton and felted wool, plus untreated natural woods and grasses for our small-pet range. We do not use BPA, phthalates or latex fillers in any product. Dyes, where we use them, are water-based and colour-fast. If a material isn't on our approved list, it doesn't go into a Wag & Whisker toy.

Independent testing

Every design is independently tested to ASTM F963 before it goes on sale. Testing covers small parts, sharp edges, seam strength and the materials themselves. When we change a design, even slightly, it is tested again.

Chew ratings explained

Every dog toy carries a chew rating from 1 to 4 so you can match the toy to how your dog plays:

- 1 Gentle: for licking, carrying and soft mouthing. Ideal for older dogs, gentle players and enrichment toys.
- 2 Moderate: for light chewing and tugging. Most dogs who play nicely fall here.
- 3 Strong: for determined chewers who work at a toy until something gives.
- 4 Power: our "Built Tough" line, for dogs that destroy most toys. These toys use our densest rubber and thickest walls.

Cat and small-pet toys don't carry chew ratings, because cats and small pets play in very different ways. Instead, each product lists the animals and ages it suits.

Supervision

No toy is indestructible. Always supervise play, check toys regularly, and replace any toy that shows cracks, loose threads, missing pieces or deep tooth marks. Remove a toy straight away if a piece comes off.

Choosing the right toy

The right toy depends on three things: your pet's size, how they play, and how much supervision you can give.

For dogs, start with the chew rating. If your dog has destroyed toys before, look at ratings 3 and 4. If your dog mostly carries toys around or plays gently, ratings 1 and 2 will feel more satisfying and are kinder on older teeth. Then check the size and weight guidance on the product itself in Section 3. A toy that is too small for a large dog can become a choking hazard, even if the material is tough.

For cats, think about the kind of play your cat enjoys. Wand and teaser toys suit cats who like to stalk and pounce with you, while kickers, mice and track toys suit cats who play on their own. Many cats enjoy a mix, so rotating toys every few days keeps them interesting.

For small pets, look for toys that are safe to chew, because rabbits, guinea pigs, hamsters and gerbils chew almost everything. Our small-pet range uses natural, untreated woods and grasses for this reason.

Caring for toys

Clean toys regularly, especially toys used for treats or played with outdoors. Each product in Section 3 lists any specific care instructions. As a general rule, rubber and silicone toys can be washed in warm soapy water, fabric and rope toys should be dried completely before they go back into play, and wooden or hay toys shouldn't be soaked. Inspect toys whenever you clean them, and retire any toy that is starting to break apart.

Rotating toys

Pets get bored of the same toy, just like people do. Keeping two or three toys out at a time and swapping them every few days makes each toy feel new again and spreads the wear across more toys, so each one lasts longer.

3. Product Catalogue

Our catalogue is grouped into dog toys, cat toys and small-pet toys. Each entry lists the SKU, price, materials, available sizes, chew rating (for dogs) and any size, weight or age guidance.
